STILL AT LIBERTY.
No Trace of the Escaped Murderers, Rohle and Pallister.
The Missing Sing Sing Boat Found Near Tarrytown.
Was Carlyle W. Harris Really Given a Chance to Escape?

SING SING PHOTOS, April 22.—The second morning of the escape from the prison here of condemned murderers Frank W. Rohle and Thomas Pallister opened without any trace of the escaped men.

Unsuccessful I will follow up this end. The men undoubtedly made their escape by the river front, but it is a question whether they crossed the river in that storm.

"I don't think the men are very far off, and while I have not heard from the searching parties this morning, I think it will be found that the men used the country roads east of this place."

"As to Guards Hulse and Murphy, of course they will be fully investigated. Their suspension, along with that of Roundsman Glynn and Guard Maher, means that they must expect a thorough examination, and this may take place next week."

"I don't take any stock in the bribery theory. I don't believe that the two guards were induced to connect themselves with the escape. It was a case of being scared into giving up the keys, and that's all."

Warden Brown said he felt much chagrined that such an affair should occur just as he was about to go out of office, as he is to be succeeded by Warden Durston, of Auburn, on May 1.

The Warden said he thought the reward for the capture of the escaped murderers ought to be increased from $250 to $1,000 in each case. This matter, however, was entirely at the discretion of Gen. Lathrop, Superintendent of State Prisons.

Gen. Lathrop telegraphed Warden Brown, asking if his presence was needed at Sing Sing. Warden Brown replied that he didn't think Gen. Lathrop could do anything good if he came to the prison. The Warden said he had twenty-five of the most skilled detectives in the United States on the lookout for the fugitives.

Boat Found Near Tarrytown.
Shortly after this conversation, word was received at the prison that a boat corresponding with the description of the boat missing from Sing Sing had been found upturned near Tarrytown.

Previously he was a body servant of the Spanish Consul, and before that he was a general utility man in the Spanish Hotel, Fourteenth street, near Eighth avenue. He could not read in English, but was very bright in the use of his own language.

Gomez went on duty last evening at 7 o'clock. After 9 o'clock all traffic on the Ninth avenue division is suspended, with the exception of an ash and coal train, which makes a down trip at about 11 o'clock, and returns between 2 and 3 A. M. Policeman Schreiber says he heard Gomez sweeping about 2 o'clock this morning.

When Station Agent Frank Witte, of 142 Amsterdam avenue, called on Edward Walker, of 119 Ninth avenue, came on duty at 5 o'clock this morning they found the body of Gomez lying on the sidewalk in front of the station.

They saw drops of blood trickling through the door of the station into a puddle in the street below.

Witte ran over to the spot and recognized Gomez. The body was lying on its back, and a dagger lay beside him, the former broken in two.

Policeman Schreiber, of the West Twentieth street station, came on summons, and he, with six others, gathered on the sidewalk and carried the body to the station-house on a litter.

The body had been dismembered. The legs were cut off at the knees, and the feet were completely severed from it at the ankle, while the left foot was mangled to shreds.

Inspector Antonio Morreau, of the "L" road, told an "Evening World" reporter his morning that Gomez was a faithful man. The former procured the dead man's position.

"I don't know whether he committed suicide or not," said Morreau. "He may have thrown himself in front of the train."

The fact that Gomez's body was found at the extreme south end of the platform, and that the train which killed him was going north, naturally, had been crossing the track at the time he met his death, the engine would have carried him to the north end of the platform. On this fact, and the additional information that Gomez had not been home since Thursday evening, is based the belief that he committed suicide.

"I don't know whether he committed suicide or not," said Morreau. "He may have thrown himself in front of the train."

MANGLED ON THE "L." GOLD RESERVE INTACT
Julian Gomez, a Porter, Crushed by the Night Ash Train.
May Have Been an Accident or a Deliberate Suicide.

The dead and mangled body of a colored porter of the Manhattan "L" road, was found on the uptown track of the Ninth avenue division at Twenty-third street, this morning at 5 o'clock.

There are differences of opinion as to whether it is a case of suicide or not. If the word of the dead man's wife is to be taken he always swore that a man who committed suicide was a fool. The name of the unfortunate man was Julian Gomez, a Cuban, who came to this country fourteen years ago. He was thirty-five years old and lived with his white wife in a furnished room at 184 Bleecker street. Their two white children are in Father Burke's Home on MacDougal street.

Gomez had been in the employ of the "L" road for four months, and two months ago he was given charge of the two stations at Twenty-third street and Ninth avenue, as a steady job at night.

Previously he was a body servant of the Spanish Consul, and before that he was a general utility man in the Spanish Hotel, Fourteenth street, near Eighth avenue. He could not read in English, but was very bright in the use of his own language.

The information was very meagre, but as Warden Brown was of the opinion that the missing boat figured in the escape, he decided to go down to Tarrytown and see for himself, which he did at 9 o'clock.

Principal keeper Connaughton was the first of the more important officials moving around early this morning. This high-ranking officer has taken the escape of the two men very much to heart, but he was more sanguine than the Warden that Rohle and Pallister are still enjoying their liberty.

Warden Brown and Principal Keeper Connaughton did not retire until midnight, and they were virtually ragged out from the nervous strain they were subjected to all day yesterday.

After the Warden's unsuccessful search along the river yesterday afternoon, he decided to remain at the prison the rest of the evening for the purpose of being on hand in the event of news of the capture of the men. He felt sure that some news would be forthcoming, but the only gleam of hope he received in that direction came about 9 o'clock.

A Possible Clue.
Under Sheriff Pugsley, of White Plains, called at the prison at that hour and had a private talk with the Warden. The conference lasted several minutes, but the tenor of it was not known until this morning.

It really formed something of a clue, but it took this morning had not resulted in anything.

Pugsley, it appears, brought information received from two railroad men who are employed on the New York and Northern road, to the effect that they had seen three men board a New York and Northern train late Thursday night at a station called White Plains, about three miles east of Sing Sing. They jumped off the train at Brewster's and then disappeared.

The description of the two of the three men tallied with that of Rohle and Pallister, but what became of them after that was a matter of conjecture.

Warden Brown was up early this morning, and after breakfast he proceeded to his daily work. In conversation with "The Evening World" reporter he said:

Warden Brown's Hopes.
"While there is no news from the fugitives, I firmly believe that it is only a question of time when they will be back with us again. Of course, the longer the time they have to get away the less chance we might expect to have in getting them."

"They are murderous, and the stamp of murder is upon them and they will give themselves away. I searched the river up and down yesterday, but I saw nothing but some trace of the missing boat, but although

OF NARONIC'S DEAD.
A Dutch Fishing Crew Probably Saw Fear in the North Sea.
Lifeless Bodies Tied to the Seats of a Small Boat.
A High Sea Prevents a Full Investigation by the Fishermen.

LONDON, April 22.—A despatch from Ymuiden, Holland, states that a fishing boat that has arrived there reports having seen a drift in latitude 55 north, longitude 5 east, a boat which had painted on its side a name which as far as could be made out read "Naronic."

In the boat were four dead men, their bodies being tied to the seats.

A high sea was running at the time the boat was sighted and this prevented the fishing vessel from running close up to the drifting boat.

It is conjectured here that this small boat came from the ill-fated Naronic, which sailed from Liverpool for New York on Feb. 11 last and has never since been heard from.

No date is given on which the boat was seen. The position where the boat was sighted is a little to the westward of the middle of the North Sea.

That part of the North Sea where the drifting boat is said to have been seen is full of wrecks of ships that have been wrecked on the rocks of the North Sea. The Naronic was a small boat, and it is not known whether it was a fishing boat or a merchant vessel.
